Lawrence for Francesco - A Dream poem by Lawrence Ferlinghetti (U.S.A.) mix-media by Gianpiero Actis (Italy)

AN IMAGIST POEM FOR FRANCESCO

The unfortunate sensation of being hit by a train
The sound of summer in the rain
A black cat called Nicolino
A house in a wood made of wood
A bird about to catch a fly
A fly about to die
A Magritte cloud in a cloudless sky
A stream between two houses
A fish about to die of drink
A ship about to sink
A man without a nation
A train about to hit Francesco Conz in a railway station And the dark dawn of American corporate fascism

OTHERNESS

It's not because I don't love you I can't see your face, it's just that I can't face your face without eliminating mine.
When you look at me, I turn away so I don't quite notice your eyes.
If only I could look at you without you looking back at me, I could begin to see you, discover the curve of your lips resembling mine; that on the slope of your cheek runs a river as deep and dark as one i grew up near, as shallow and dry. And maybe, if you dared look back at me and saw your tears filling my eyes, we could begin to replace that never-ending fear with love.

Feuilles

entre la rosée et la nuit, nos rêves ont tissé le langage indomptable

les cris des heures commencent avec l'existence du poème

EMBRACING FREEDOM

Unsure love,
Painful shackles,
Repressed dreams,
Slave to ongoing trends
All-Mundane, all-fickle
To all these barriers
I say "No more."
Blue sky,
Warm sun,
Green island,
Perfect creation by the Divine;
Now I truly feel them,
Now I can really breathe,
Now I can genuinely live,
Now I am completely free.

ÉCLORE À CONTRE JOUR

Secrètes

Mes mains pleuvent, un matin de larmes, à l'encre livide, Tracée pour toujours ...
Les yeux bordés de rouge Miroitent le jour mauvais.

La rose piétinée et trahie Sait le Graal qu'elle tait.
Son parfum défie la cruauté rivale.

Insistant, un motif:

La lune muette, bleuie de douleur,
Le motif de la rose crie à tous les vents, Son éclosion fulgure, à contre jour.

ARBOR VITAE

Vesta's breath of sacred fire
Weaving, pirouetting cosmic nexus
From the vignette roots
To the top of miracles Crisscrossing proverbial fountain Connecting all forms
Of harmonic happiness
Incipient braids
Of mystical scenography
Far reaching eyes of the humanity
A fruit of consortium Recreating evolution
Tree of life
Tree of light!

Floating eyes

painting by Gianpiero Actis (Italy) poem by Lidia Chiarelli (Italy) (Translated by Aeronwy Thomas)

TIMELESS WORLD

Glances towards a world without time where silent creatures float and lose themselves in a sea of crystal

and drops of colour settle slowly on veils of ice

street lamps from times past splinters of light filter through the dark night

time is a lake fed by the moon solitude running by itself for days birds lost in the machinery feathers in the grease of progress

there is a mountain by that lake a waterfall that roars to heaven with rainbows flickering and deities laughing at the beggars lie semiotic madness drives the poet with metaphors more beautiful than breath with visions that flicker at the rim of every day solitude ending serendipity is a matter of why one man meets his destiny with his eyes held high above the wind and others just fold and fade

SOUS LA DICTÉE D'UN FLEUVE

Derrière les mots que j'écris Tu es là, toujours
J'entends le Verbe de ton Âme
De poème en poème

La marée monte et descend Ce sont les battements de ton cœur
O sentir ta présence dans la chair du poème Comme l'amour qui se lève Au passage de l'Oiseau Folle passion, délire de Feu Étreinte infinie du Désir

Je suis celle qui court après la Vie Avant que le Temps ne lui fasse Signe Qu'il est temps de retourner aux Origines

*Je suis fille de la Voie Lactée Née d'une Étoile Filante
Fécondée par toi Mon Fleuve...*

DYING IN SUMMER

In the soft darkness the birds cried:
the transparency has been broken.
And we found, only for a moment, the still point of the drift.

Hidden into the warm summer Death is waiting
The fire in my heart was frozen,
but is still alive.

Burning ice's flames are shaking with memories, lights and shadows from the past and from it will never be.

Time, slow down.
The windows are closed. Outside, life shouts and runs and cycles...
My eyes are his.
His deep peace is mine.
Happiness, stay with us and we will be always one.

The flying Dutchman

A distant ship roams the endless sea
Made of wood from an ancient tree
It's captain alone.....it seems unreal Stands everlasting behind the steeringwheel.

Starboardside a storm is near The captain stares, he has no fear
For he is not dead, but also not alive
The Lord's curse is his immortal drive

On his ship he is forever bound
The Cape he will never round.

LA BEAUTÉ

La beauté est allumée seulement pour la pupille exacte.

La beauté fleurit nouvelle et immense au moment précis.

Elusive et fragile elle se déplace dans l'océan caché entre deux massacres:
le vide et l'absolu.
jamais
ne sera dévorée.

CE DOUX MONDE SI DOUX

Ce doux monde si violent
Que j'aimerai quitter
Ce doux monde si violent
Au parfum de traîtrise
Au goût insipide
A la cruauté sans égal
Ce doux monde si violent
Aux accents de perfidie Je me mure dans un silence Car mon tombeau il est devenu Démesuré est ta quête de pouvoir

Avide tu es devenu
La faim tu as semé
La pauvreté et l'anarchie L'inégalité tu arbores
La misère ton effigie
Les larmes pleuvent
Les balles fusent Honnis sois-tu!
Porteur de Chaos !
Toi le vautour
Mais où sont les Colombes de nos printemps?
Mais où sont les héros de nos vies ?
Que sont nos martyrs devenus?
Nos veuves et orphelins?
Toi ce monde si doux et si violent Toi ce monde si perfide Je te quitte
Je t'honnis
Je t'abhorre
Ô combien

LA MER DE PAPIER

Exaltation faible, fluctuante et imaginaire

REMEMBRANCES

Lights across the bay
Like a string of pearls

Our days are even Traces of seasons before Hidden beneath
Newly green grass

RAINBOWS AT NIGHT

The bird voices are dust;
And dry summer's death breath Is murdering flowers—
A graveyard of colours.

The lizards are dark twigs That are filmed by the eyes;
And the scanning vultures
Are guarding their heaven.

I seek out the shadows
As I pray for the wind
Or the cloud of the fog.
I long for the moon's ice.

I leave thoughts in deserts, Words die in their silence,
For tomorrow's poems
Will be rainbows at night.

LE RUISEAU MON AMI.

Un papillon surnage à la surface d'un ruisseau.
Il fait la planche en observant le ciel.
Mais personne, au passage, ne s'aperçoit qu'il le regarde.

Le ruisseau se nourrit intégralement du ciel et du jour.
Pour sa miraculeuse transparence; sans quoi, elle ne serait pas.

Je regarde sur- le- champ un ruisseau, qui naturellement, coule.
Mon esprit peut en imaginer le cours jusqu'au bout.
Mais j'ai mieux à faire : mon âme, elle, l'accompagne jusqu'à la fin !

Je me plais à courir le ruisseau au nom de la poésie, Qui semble composer un peu avec moi.

A quoi bon imaginer l'océan Lorsqu'on est au bord d'un ruisseau ?

J'aime même ces ruisseaux abandonnés parfois en ville, Pleins de sacs plastiques.

Dehors, le chuchotement discret de la pluie fine me fascine, Autant que le cliquetis du ruisseau que j'aime tant.

Pauvre de lui, ce poète n'est même pas l'ami des tempêtes et des ruisseaux, Pourquoi des tempêtes et des ruisseaux, me diriez-vous ?
Demandez-le directement à la poésie, et laissez-moi tranquille !

Je voudrais retourner au ruisseau avant ma mort.

THE GLOOMY SKY OF APRIL

It's the light of a few fireflies in a row sadly hiding in a lost summer
The roaring voice of the cattle Subsiding
Somehow collapses a gesture better left at the kitchen table I had a bad day inside Outside the rebel yell of the swallows grows like a thunderstorm
Maybe they're calling the strength
So peacefully asleep in the gloomy sky of april

TIDAL WAVE

The sea has its own agenda – a tight timetable to keep.
So many beaches to sweep clean, tides to ebb, a moon to please.

Cliffs to carve and whales to carry to ancient birthing grounds, ships to float and treasure to bury.

And a whole wet world to nourish – pink shrimp and silver sardine, oyster and albatross – the shark, the sea lion, the octopus.

It doesn't mean to drown anyone, washing over them and leaving them breathless on the shore, but it does.

You have your own agenda, too, life's timetable to chip away at before the big clock on the wall says it's time to go -

So many things to keep afloat, so many lists and mysteries, so much time running through you like a million tiny grains of sand.

You don't mean to drown me, either, washing over me and leaving me breathless out beyond the breakwater – but you do.

THE SEETHING CAULDRON

(for DC)

I could snuggle up within your golden arms forever and let the jaded world drift by...

But I know the moon would miss my love, and the emerald mountains too.

Somehow we can't escape the random roulette of life.
After all, destiny brought us together.

What else can we expect from this rich seething cauldron?

Blessings wreath our hearts and challenges force us to grow.

Perhaps this earthly experience is all about love and healing.

DROIT DEVANT

Droit devant
L'étau du fleuve
Qui t'étreint
Qui t éternise
Puis le vent dit la peine
De l'arbre bavard
Qui s'abreuve
Dans tes comptines
Dans tes gages
Dans tes poèmes
Dans tes sourires.

Droit devant
Le rire de l'eau
Qui t'amuse
Qui t'émerveille
Puis pénélope
Tisse l'éternel amour
Qui va et qui nous revient Qui se nourrit du cri du cœur Des soupirs et des rires Et des senteurs toujours siennes.

Leaves of fall poem and photo by Ann Bagnall (Australia)

UNATTAINABLE PEACE

The leaves of fall
They dance a wondrous waltz Falling, floating, ever downward Lifted up by gusting winds
And tossed away, into the stream Or piled in heaps Crackling to life, just for a moment Falling, ever falling Into the night, into the stream
Into the flames
The beauty and the joy
The dying and the pain
Falling, the flow of grace Eternal threads
The elegance of endings
That whispers low and sweet And lets me drop
With nothing left to grasp
And speaks in silence
Of unattainable peace

TOTEM PALUDIER

Des souffles passent à travers ses grilles plus librement qu'à travers nos paroles

Des courants les emportent plus loin

Mobile immobile

Chaque signe arrêté sur la grève comme un infini d'espace.

MASK

You can wear a mask
And paint your face
Every time faces change
Every time artist paint

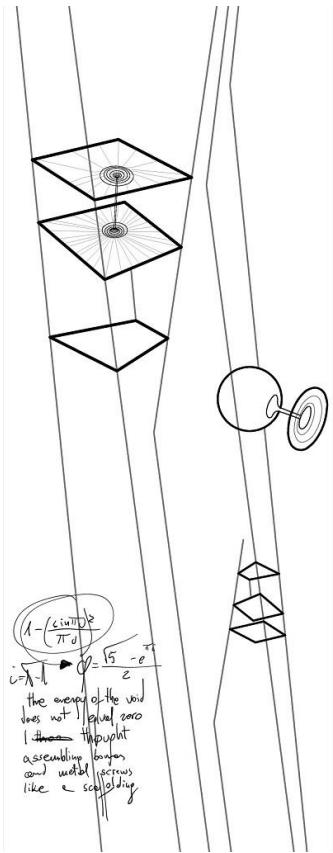

You can judge me
Over the colour of my skin
Over the verge of my crying
Over the verge of my dying
I am loud, I am silent,
I am whole, I am broken,
So vivid and so beautiful.

Under each resides a silent soul with the deepest stories untold.
Stories that get buried under the greatest of its glories.

— DONNE LA NUIT —

Une lame et le temps, dansant, en la blessure.

Âpre, le roc dénude la nuée.

Donne la nuit. Donne la. Il pleut sur le monde.

À ce moment du jour qui donne dans la nuit, quand les bêtes se taisent.

Quand les hommes soudain. Quand la pluie seulement.

Ce moment de la nuit qui donne dans la nuit.
C'est le puits de la nuit.

Où l'obscur pour l'obscur est un miroir sans yeux, une onde sans rivages.

Qui boit de cette eau là saura ce qu'il ne sait.
Il ne bougera pas, mais le monde vers lui viendra fleuve en sa source.

Consentira enfin à la force des choses, et ainsi trouvera grâce devant la mort.

AUTUMN

Clouds now grey shadows softly moving

over dusty green trees

How dry the grasses how lovely my country in your duochrome clothing waiting with parched patience to welcome rains
this reluctant autumn

AGHORI

Thou
Are the part of my heart?
To be together, never to be apart
My heart desires to go down Ribs with sensual bliss
Our body drift
And you cover my valley with bliss Touching the cord of my soul
Your music takes me, earthly blanket of sleep
Where two bodies releasing one breathe.

Now
Silence between us set me free
A thousand words won't bring you back Nor thousand tears
You are asleep and I have just leaned over At the ghat of Dashashwamedh
To turn the page of your life
As an Aghori

PEOPLE WITHOUT EYELIDS

In this city people don't have eyelids.
They are sentenced to look even in a dream.
Winds squeeze their tears, through which they see ocean images, a big animal slobbering with foam, spitting seaweeds.
And they sacrifice their bodies for him in a last will,
and watch how the waves blur the footsteps in the sand.

L'ALGUE

Je suis algue de pair et de mer inconnue, une mer qui m'emporte
au gré de ses marées.
Je vais, algue, de pair avec les thalophytes, dans des flots écumeux, dans de troubles eaux bleues.
Je suis algue de vair au blason de ma mer, émaux, argent, azur,
je suis algue nature.
Je suis algue de verre, produit de la silice, qu'aime le dieu des mers lorsque la lune glisse un long regard soyeux au fond de mes eaux bleues.
Je suis une algue brune, la fille de Neptune.

CAN WE TALK ABOUT...

can we talk about the possible and the Impossible can we talk about drops of water about chilly winds

can we talk about those who stay and those travelling wires of steel in air about lines through the world

can we talk about
visible invisible about what is ugly or beautiful true or teetering

can we collect remnants of languages searches for words in the real between faith and doubt

Semblant de rien
elle passe dans les mots d'autrui silencieuse elle observe les cris des âmes utiles mais se tient dans la discrétion

semblant de rien
elle marche sans fin dans les histoires peuplées d'images on ne la voit pas ni ne l'entend et pourtant elle est là tout près

semblant de rien
elle passe dans la lumière cueille des mots par-ci par-là invente des prières subtiles en se disant : comprenne qui pourra inutile d'en dire trop car les mots sont trop chauds de rires et de pleurs entrelacés

A l'abri des hommes dans la nudité du verger l'étoffe se resserre le monde sourit le désert n'est pas loin.
Dans l'innocence des commencements ils vont, torses nus, dans les cendres, là où se tient le pli du vent.
Aux adieux pluriels, se joint le sacre immobile du temps

Dans le désordre, la colère des fonds le long des vastes chaînes doux torrent clair de pierres, nuits vétustes incertaines nos yeux fatigués habiteront le ciel nous saurons, dans l'immobilité des chambres, quelles étranges images renferment nos fenêtres icônes du jour au jardin de l'enfance vent de sable cœur de pierre clairières de forges encre foulée au doigt la nuit creuse, ensemence, conduit la sève au verts balancements des arbres.

JAMAICA FAREWELL

(for Marcia Biggs - Jamaican artist who died young)

This is an unripe poem, unfinished like your life dear sister, dear friend Unprepared as we for your untimely death and as unwhole as I feel and yet, it is.

You had already left a legacy.
Did you know how loved you were?
I know there are many broken hearts in Montego Bay,
New York, England, Kingston, South America.
The telephone was our sizzling ground, a million conversations from the simple to the metaphysical.

I've read the universe constantly invites us to grow.
But your soul has jumped by leaps and bounds leaving us unready with only the masterpieces of art and memory.
I guess we are impelled to accept a soul's timing, her choice of when to let go and join those who use light as you did to color and illumine the corridors of the heart.

RUPTURE

Le cordon rompu tombe la foudre
L'eau attendue s'enfonce dans le ciel
La terre asséchée vomit tous les feux
Le feu ravage et assèche la terre

Le cri s'éternise les oreilles se bouchent Justice réclame-t-il justice pour tous Le juste corrompu se marie au mal Le mal ravage et oppresse la terre

Le regard inquiet se tourne vers le ciel
Sur sa face timide s'y déchiffre l'avenir Avenir certain plein d'amertume L'amertume ravage et empoisonne la terre

L'effarement survient se foule la raison
Le calme impatient est pris de panique La détresse grandit et éclate en fureur La fureur ravage et saccage la terre

Le feu ravage et assèche la terre
La terre asséchée vomit tous les feux
L'eau attendue s'enfonce dans le ciel
Et la foudre en tombant coupe le cordon

SPILLING SALVATION

Sweet sounds etched upon empty silence cover over abstract emotions that linger in hidden spaces waiting for the salve of solace to spill forth from an ever full chalice

The symphony ignites as strings stretch across the corridors of time and memories of pastel love come screaming to the surface of a stained heart smeared throughout the years by a song that cannot be forgotten

SWATANTRA SONNET 77

I've heard the noble sound of your footsteps, my love.
Come, come closer, and slowly open your heart. Spread the fragrance of your beautiful breasts. Let the door be closed. Embrace me tightly with your gentle hand and set your sweetest lips on mine like a wild dove.
Keep on crawling up to finding my heart's main thread as vivid as the spring, trembling at ocean floor.

Take off the seamless boutique sari and raise both hands to untie your hair; blow on me like petals of flower. Without you I'm lonely, dry and dark.
Implant the fresh, eternal light in my green land.
Don't bother making the bed tonight, rather sooth the warmth of my tense body—my tropical cells, spreading the pure touch of your astounding spark.

Y CROIRE

Il lui faudra, ce soir, Affronter les saisons absentes, Recoudre sa peau trouée Là où était son coeur

Le ciel est trop bas, trop lourd
Et ses mots à lui d'acier coupant

Un jour, c'est sûr,
Il y aura une autre terre ouverte
Où l'on ne meurt pas
À larmes blanches

Y croire. Y croire.

Old man

OLD MAN IN THE GARDEN

He is a story being told through tall garden hedges and long rows of barbed-wire fences.
In the white of his eyes (that space of pain)

a hammer swings and tiny cottages move longing for something called rest.
His diary buries his truths in its own fog;
spiral-bound by wires of yearning.
Old age is like that - It has much to say but chooses silence.
Something new takes the place of the old
New blossoms flourish on new trees...
Except
Except that a nameless smoke drifts along the back of a garden bench, brings water to the onlooker's eyes.
The punched-out sun that glides just above the grass at noon shudders at the scribbled words trembles at its proximity to the diary of yearnings.
Its light tramples the shadows surrounding the lonely garden bench.
Perhaps its lone occupant asks the bald sun to move into his heart.
Move through the coils of his fingers Move through his small, rusty words
Move, so that his story might end with a semblance of warmth.

THE SONG OF THE SIREN

The siren calls you through the hiss of a never ending crash lamenting evening waves pulls you toward me through the deep dark blue The tide is strong draws you in closer, closer

The sapphire sea blends with my tears longing for you I wait on cold wet boulders jetting out from shallow reefs I wave you in while I sing my haunting song I remove the shells from my breasts finger comb my hair place the pearls around my neck
The night slowly sets on my shoulders Your wooden ship delivers you home to me as you dive in and swim toward me your eyes sparkle bright with longing I reach my hand to yours and bring you in You kiss the salty sea tears that roll down my face as you promise to never leave again

Au bout de la ville des couloirs étroits de fenêtres Œils de bœufs borgnes cintrés au ciel

Couloirs entiers d'ennui chaud Rab d'alcool
dans la gorge pâteuse du matin

L'hiver
aux arbres aux ponts les arabesques du givre irisé

Tirer le rideau sur la journée

Raconte-moi deux fois sa couleur errante

Lie les deux

Le jour la rue

L'ITINÉRAIRE DE LA PIERRE

Jupiter bat dans le ciel
Vénus se dilate, une pierre tombée en son milieu Nos dos se font face
Je n'avais pas vu votre visage avant La première fois de chaque chose m'étreint

J'aime la langue quand elle va chercher dans les orifices les cris et le silence dressé

Un fantôme poilu des origines me saute dessus Un chien noir et blanc, je le connais Une balle traverse ma mémoire et tire encore La blessure du chien coule dans mes veines Sur les pierres mutiques

A l'oreille de mes rêves, je murmure de grands mots osseux Je me hisse debout
Le torse en avant, le dos tué, je continue

Larme d'enfance, point pur solitaire Diamant noir au commencement de moi

LES CONFINS

Dans les méandres du cœur il y a le vertige la faim des corps - le manque tout ça J'ai rencontré des fantômes et nous trinquons aux souvenirs

Aux confins de moi-même – décor de masques –

Les déserts peuvent déployer ors et poussières ne restent que des empreintes de soif Trop de feu a brouillé les couleurs

Ah les mirages !
— qu'est-ce donc ? —
Chaque matin, ça palpite dans la lumière Un silence plein et ce qui n'est pas dit

THE TRANSFIGURED MUSE

Calliope---
From being a Grecian deity of epic poetry
To the one transiting to the digital age,
The beautiful-voiced Muse
In her latest avatar in the post-industrial age
As someone bald, lean-faced and cold Marked with taut blue veins and eyes blank Hybrid, a cross guided by artificial intelligence.
List of the random words, like binary matrix calculation, Splashed across the android visage that is reminiscent Of a pharaoh's death- mask stored in a secret funereal chamber dark.
Calliope: Once you inspired Homer, Hesiod, Virgil, Ovid, Dante and others
A full figure wearing a gold crown and carrying a roll of paper, Modeled mostly after the ladies of the nobility of Athens or Rome
By the likes of Simon Vouet and Robert Fagan, among others Across the varied and changing culturalscapes of thousands of years,

Finally being re-visualized by Rob as a Muse for the denizens of cyber-world Orbiting as mere atoms in a de-humanized space,
And thus witnessed and attested by an inner eye,

This transfiguration of a minor goddess into a digital avatar is complete, Nearly ecstatic for the netizens.

The Transfiguration Of Calliope poem by Sunil Sharma (India) image by Rob Harle (Australia)

Gone too soon

BURN AT NOON (BORNO)

In the noon of the loose night
Eagles ride through to boneyard
For the uncalled feast of death
That fetter anew their breath

The spooky sounds of the graveyard
Was the last cried out from the Eagle's mouth
As they dance to the melodious dirges of death Culled from the teat of firearms of death's knights

Alas !!! And like the snake shed its skin They laid down their feathers, akin Like the foregone souls of our land
Just in the noon of the loose night...

But I did remember; of course I do,
I remembered the shape of their feathers
I remembered its beauty like the peacock But how soon now they have gone?

Today was the odd of yesterday Where they spread their wings high But like a dream in reality to say Now their wings faded and dry

Just in the noon of the loose yesterday's night
And at the noon of the day
We shall make the rite of passage In respect to lay Down the deceased Eagles of our land

And hear we the song to sing
"Burn at noon, Eagles gone too soon"

THE LONG WAIT

Dark winter roars outside,
I am cocooned, waiting patiently for the sounds of spring borne on wings that will once more bring the murmurings
of long summer days,
for all to hear,
and to sing in praise of the climate that will enable them to raise the next generations

without fearing forever, these long, dark, cold, winter days.

Égarées sur les formes les mains palpent à la recherche de la vie quand l'une se penche l'autre s'écrie pendant que la troisième trouve le juste milieu de la ligne d'appui

jeu de mains pas très vilain s'harmonisent sur la pierre enchantée !

THE CATS OF BROOKLYN

Brooklyn cats breakfast on birds.
No canned wet pet food for them, nor kibbles & bits of dry food.

Brooklyn cats are street cats.
They rule rooftops, fire escapes, and fences.
They roam backyards and alleyways and won't be confined in condos, cages, or courtyards.

These are the cats of Brighton, Borough Park, Bay Ridge, Bensonhurst, and Bushwick.
These are not the cats of Manhattan, Queens, Staten Island, or The Bronx.

These Brooklyn cats are tough, not even the big dogs of Bed-Stuy will tangle with them, knowing they, like their cousins of Tel Aviv, fiercely fang and claw all comers.

You can take the cat out of Brooklyn to Long Island, Westchester, or Connecticut, but you can't take the Brooklyn out of the cat.

THE PILGRIMS' TALE

No one deigns
To listen to the tale from the very beginning.
Leaves are leaves,
And trees are trees.
Greeneries always remains A visual illusion,
Or an unconscious wooden bed.

I once love the fir that wasn't a fir, Frightening solitude with azure branches.
Then, sleeplessness tired me so much That I fell like light feather over tree crowns.

And right here starts the tale
Of what pilgrims said about me;
That I once was made up of flesh and blood,
But afterwards, one September night,
Becoming a wattle of leaves, I lost the sense Of feeling the fervor of your body.

Cold like I was in the genes of my origin,
I breathe under candle shadows at nights, Without understanding anything
From the fragile game of the tiny little flame.

... And the tale ends every moonlit night
When you, drunk with blinding bodies, Pray to VENUSES wearing misty faces ...

You are such a sad pilgrim Travelling along roads of leafless trees ...

THE EYE OF THE SUN

when the sun (or its very eye) radiates nothing but darkness even light would be frozen into shadows of skulls and skeletons

WINTER'S SLEEPY EYE

Mornings and evenings ever inflamed
By passage of her golden chariot
Through my skies
Casting light of amber glow Upon seasons of my soul.

Ice touched and touched by fire Ever inflamed
this winter's sleepy eye!

ONENESS

I'm one with infinite dream Blooming inside me...
An eternal consciousness
Of being opening from the core
As this is unfolding-Petals of the illuminating lotus.

Beyond the Blue

BEYOND THE BLUE...

Standing by the seaside and nibbling the wet sand I feel the ebb nibbling my feet as if calling me to chase it, but I stay firm, wait for the next wave to surge in – has it any message from far?

Message from beyond the blue
I wait to reach me before the sun sets, before the stars start gossip and spread rumor about my lost love; but do they ever know the love blossoms within and decays not !

SUNSET AT GRAMAN ISLAND
KERALA, INDIA

Immovable at the riverbank the slender coconut trees

In their crowns the offspring
the ripe fruit

an immense mirror alike the water surface at dusk reflecting the declining light

an entanglement of heaven and earth.

ILLUSORY BELLS

I look at what is happening all around me
I look at the wars, the ravages of nature,
I look at all this misery Pray, if life on Earth has to be such, why on its soils did I ever venture ?

Would I not have been better in the divine garden Enjoying my days with God, spending my time lost in games of angels Surrounded by purity, surrounded by vibrations, with a golden aura
why was I pulled by Earth's illusory bells ?

But then, I turn my gaze to the skies Keeping myself drowned in the holiness of my soul's garden.

TU AS L'ÈRE TRISTE

- Tu as l'ère triste.
- Oui, j'ai l'ère du repli identitaire.
J'ai l'impression d'être assis dans une salle d'attentat à espérer que le destin sera en retard ou que mon nom ne figurera pas sur la liste de la clinique des terreurs.
Mon état se détériore avec ce corps étranger sur les talons.
Mais je n'ai envie de rien sinon de cocooning avec les miens et d'un bouillon de poulet pour l'âme terrorisée.
- Je comprends ton besoin de couverture.
Je vois aussi arriver cette ère de glace qui nous refroidit tous.
Peut-être alors nous faut-il des miroirs à profusion pour y lire la beauté du monde et, nous trouvant une ressemblance avec le reste de l'humanité, passer à l'ère de famille.

Penmon Priory

Listen to the wind as it blows from Puffin Island, racing with the tide as it ruffles Ynys Môn.
Secrets will be shared as it whistles round the priory:
whispers frame the windows where the early glass has gone.

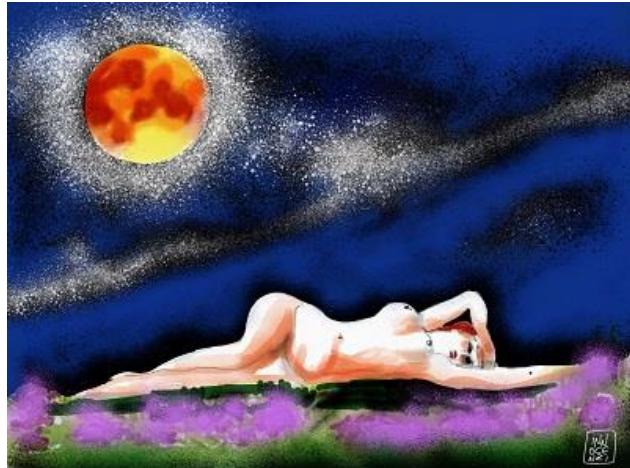

Listen to the tales of Cybi and of Seiriol, godly men who prayed once the Viking raids were past.
Saints of west and east, they bequeathed a living legacy:
doves of peace would scatter but the faithful few held fast.

Listen to the wind as it chants a Benedicite, rousing hearts of stone as the ripples rise at last.

APRIL

It was night, and I was surprised by winter's surrender to the new spring.
The albedo of the moon on your skin's white. Your black hair tresses of saffron. A wave of blades vibrating in the breeze of the evening.
You were wrapped in the shawl of stars.
You disclosed me then so that soft April blazes in the blanket of clods, sprinkled with the scent of violets.

DECEMBER NIGHT

I have opened the window on this cold December night and the stars in the silence which surrounds the city once again
have told me of you
